ALEX. GAZETTE & VIRGINIA ADVERTISER
(FOR THE COUNTRY)
Published Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays
At five dollars per annum.
Marriage and Death Notices fifty cents. Obituaries will be charged at advertisement rates for notices over four lines.

In order to make the price of the Gazette correspond, as near as possible, to the requirements of the stringency of the times, and that the paper may be within the easy reach of all who desire to subscribe to it, we have, through the certainty of much pecuniary loss, determined that from the 1st of January, 1877, it shall be delivered to its patrons for $6 a year. City subscribers who prefer paying by the week will be supplied at the rate of 12 cents, and will be called on regularly every fortnight by the collector. For this small sum the subscribers to the Gazette will be supplied with all the latest local and State news, and such general current news as may be interesting. New subscribers will give their names to Mr. Jacob Ruxbury, who will canvass the city for that purpose, or leave them at this office.

The Michigan Horror.

The sensation of Northern Michigan is the terrible murder at Chesaning, near Saginaw, Michigan. A woman named Smith loves a young man named Alexander. They continue their illicit love for more than a year. Smith, the husband, is cross and jealous. They want him out of the way, and a plot to murder him is planned. Mrs. Smith has a sister just married to one Cargio, in New York State. She hates Smith, and so does her young husband. Correspondence follows; the letters are destroyed. They agree to kill the jealous husband, and make a journey to Michigan for the purpose. Alexander is to stand by with a trunk strap for Cargio to choke Smith after he has been stunned with a club. At midnight, while Mrs. Smith is lying with her husband, Alexander leaves his hotel, enters an open window, meets Cargio and his wife, who are stopping in Smith's house, Cargio gets the club and falls upon the sleeping Smith, who gives one groan of despair. The guilty wife arises softly, goes to her babe in an adjoining room, and while the blows continue on her husband's head, and while the trunk strap is drawn around his gasping throat, she puts her fingers in his ears and presses the babe to her bosom. Smith is killed after a frightful struggle. Once he cries out and moans. Blood flows from his nose and mouth. The bed is saturated with the blood. To remove all traces of violence Alexander and Cargio cut the plastering from the wall, put it in the bed, and carried the still warm body on the mattress to the barn; they pitch a ton of hay upon it, then set fire to the barn in two places. While they are doing this the two women scrape the bloody floor and headboard in the house with a pair of scissors. Suddenly loud flames burst from the roof of the barn, wild cries echo on the midnight air, the neighbors hurry from their beds only to see the red-hot outlines of the barn sink into a mass of flame. The women scream and pull their hair, and in convulsive sobs inform the appalled listeners that poor Mr. Smith went out to look after his horses, when a kick from one of them disabled him, broke the lantern and set the barn on fire. On the day following the mattress were found and other proofs that could not be explained away. Then Alexander, the Don Juan of the tragedy, confessed. Mrs. Smith corroborated his dreadful story, and the trial began. Cargio has just been convicted of murder in the first degree. The evidence against his wife is now before the jury, after which Mrs. Smith and her lover, Alexander, will take the prisoners' stand.

Cargio declares his innocence; also his wife's. She says she is sick and a d. is allowed her in open court. The following is a description of the strange scene, as given by the Saginaw Courier of December 23:

Yesterday proved to be an interesting day in the Cargio-Smith murder trial and considerable progress was made, though from present appearance it is not probable that the case will go to the jury before Tuesday or Wednesday next. Twelve witnesses were called and testified on the part of the people. The crowd of spectators was smaller than common during the forenoon, but after the noon recess every available space outside the bar was occupied, both on the floor and in the gallery. Deputy Sheriff Rice had plenty to do to keep the crowd from pressing forward and obstructing the view of the ladies occupying the seats. The defendant is becoming generally known as the sleeping beauty.

She still occupies her easy chair and reclines on her left side with her feet upon the rounds of another chair or resting with limbs extended to full length to the chair itself. She is turned partially toward the jury, but only the pointed right cheek and forehead are visible to them. Her eyes are shut almost continuously, so that it is impossible to get a fair look at them, and during the whole day she did not raise her head from the pillow except as she rose to go to her cell. One would naturally wonder what kind of a nature she must have to remain so unmoved at the startling and blood curdling revelations made against her by the witnesses upon the stand. At times, when no one is known to her to be observing, she can be seen to peep at the witness with her right eye partially opened, the left being hidden from sight by the pillow. But the moment she observes any person looking at her the eye is quickly closed and remains so until she again thinks herself unobserved, and at no time as she sits or reclines in her easy way can the eager throng catch even a glimpse at her.

After giving the testimony the reporter continues:—
At this point in the testimony Mrs. Cargio was seized with one of her frequently occurring fits, and she began to gasp, stretch, squelch and clutch at empty nothingness with her outstretched hands, and at once Wm. A. Clark, jr., laid his hand persuasively upon her ear, and whispered some forcible utterances in her ear, by which she was made to understand that it was not the right time to put in a fit to the best effect and advantage, whereupon she instantly became quiet.

Mrs. Smith at the close of court was still on the stand, and will be again this morning. We could see no perceptible change in her testimony except as to new facts, and her demeanor was about the same as on the former trial, except that she testified to her criminal intimacy with Alexander with a little more nerve than on the former trial, though yesterday it was interspersed with an occasional giggle.—N. Y. Herald.
